Social firms – a model for poverty reduction?

The number of people excluded from the labour market has risen over the past years. The consequence is an increase in precarious situations and in the number of people affected by poverty. At the same time, work integration has gained in importance in reducing poverty. Social firms are regarded as a corner stone of work integration. In what way do social firms contribute to the reduction of poverty, what is impedimentary?

The keynotes, workshops and discussion groups of the Social Firms Conference 2015 focus on questions such as these. The aim is to advance, in the dialogue between practice, politics and science, successful strategies for poverty reduction.

Specialists and executive staff from social firms, politics, administration and research are addressed.
